Using Hashtags Effectively

A hashtag is a keyword phrase used in Twitter conversations that is preceded by a pound (#) sign and written without spaces. The primary purpose of a hashtag is to bring conversations on the same topic into a single thread to make it convenient for information consumers to view and compare ideas. It effectively creates a community online centered on the hashtag's definition or use [www.hashtags.org].

The hashtag should optimally be used as an integral word in the tweet otherwise it functions merely as a standalone keyword that uses valuable Twitter character count (i.e. 144). For a hashtag to be successful, it has to have the following elements:

- catchy
- . short and concise
- . clear
- relatable
- . unique for your application (see registration discussion that follows)

Twitter experts recommend keeping the keyword under 6 characters. Try to use singular forms of hashtags unless the context demands plural. Limit the number of hashtags in any single tweet (i.e. maybe 2 or 3 maximum).

Tweets may lack any definitive purpose or the message the tweeter is trying to convey may be hidden when tweets are sent that are composed exclusively of hashtags.

While it is possible to create and use a hashtag spontaneously, to be most effective, hashtags should be defined and registered on-line with www.HASHTAGS.ORG or a similar user group¹ that keeps a repository of hashtag definitions. Defining and registering your hashtags may help in "overloading" hashtags with multiple and confusing meanings.

In addition, within our profession, hashtags and their use should be compiled, defined, and communicated to improve trending opportunities. While world-wide "trending" may not be realistic for our profession, consistent use of hashtags makes social media "communication" more robust. It opens the possibility of retrieving historic twitter "discussions" on any particular U&CF topic, or to track activity in a manner similar to the use of search terms in search engines. These subscription tweet tools (HootSuite, Tweetdeck and Monniter) may be useful for monitoring Twitter hashtags use for urban and community forestry and related interests.

Common hashtags should be used as appropriate throughout your social media work including: Twitter, Google+, Instagram, Facebook, YouTube, Tumblr, Wordpress, and other blogs. When common hashtags are used consistently by colleagues or other professionals the effect within the social media community can be magnified (i.e. trending of our issues!).

URL Shortening

Many on-line services are available for URL shortening when your tweet contains a link. Common ones include:

- . bitly.com
- . goo.gl
- tinyURL.com

While there may not be an advantage of any one of these over their competitors, an organization's strategy may want to include the preferred URL shortener and then use it consistently when tweeting.

The following is a bilingual list being compiled of "common" hashtags encountered or reported that may be useful for others in the urban forestry social media realm.

In this list, hashtags that are bold are recommended; others that are similar are listed for completeness and discussion (in light blue). The last column indicated whether a particular urban forestry hashtag has been registered and defined.
